road annex to the bridge across the city through Spring street, connecting with the present New York Elevated railroad system, was passed with hut four dissenting votes. This proposed bridge, which is capitalized at $25,000,000, with George Hoadiy, Adolph Ladenburg, Abran J. Hardenberg, George W. Whagate and Frederick Chiman as incorporators, is to be in the form of a Y, or, in reality, two bridges, with separate terminus on the Brooklyn side—one at Broadway, Williamsburg, and the other lower down the river. Both these spans converge to a point on the New York shore at Delancey street.

It is designed primarily to connect the elevated railway systems of the two cities, but will have carriage-ways and accommodation for loot passengers.

Another great pool of blood had formed on Second avenue just under where the body tective Dalton and again returned to San was found. There is considerable mystery Nothing further was known of young Hyer agent on the read. He was forty years old. They also intimate that the presum and fived with his family at 97 Ludlow street. Gunter was what is known as an vextra At a o'clock yesterday afternoon he went to wors at the One Hundred and Lieventh street south-bound station in the place of Henry luckehart, the regular night agent wh was desirous of taking a night off. Gunter worked until midnight last night, at which time the station is closed. Nothing had given no hint of his whereabouts and no more is known of his movements, and no far as could be learned no one saw him until his body was found cold in death this morning by Gateman Ditmar.

There is but intle doubt, however, that he was affled by one of the "wildcat" englishs which run up and down the road at night, "drilling" after the regular traffic has ceased.

Gunter had worked at this station several times, and he always left there about ten ninutes after midnight. The ten minutes were spent in counting up the cash. After counting it his duty was to take it to the station, on the opposite side of the track, and deposit it in a strong box. The money was found there intact this It is assumed from this that Gunter had crossed the tracks, deposited his money and was returning when struck by a train or a drill engine It is considered somewhat remarkable, however, that the colored porter, a man named Myers, whose business it was to cross the tracks frequently to look after the fires, did not see the body. Before leaving the station, early this morning, Myers said that he did not see the body, s it was fifty feet south of a direct line across from one station to the other.

It was very dark, too, he says. He heard no growns, and it is to be presumed from this that Gunter was rendered unconscious when struck and never regained his senses. The body was taken to the Twenty-ninth Precinct Police Station and the man's family netified of what had happened. News of the affair was also sent to the coroner's office.
